

ABSTRACT OF THE DISCLOSURE

A domain of an object detected by template matching is tracked in accordance with information on a motion vector that is included in compressed and encoded data. This feature eliminates template matching-based object detection when it comes to a motion vector information-containing image subject to object detection. As a result, object detection is achievable with a less amount of processing, when compared with the template matching-based detection of objects in all images subject to object detection.